Throughout 2007 and 2008, stories of astonishing sales records tumbled out of the press offices of Christie’s and Sotheby’s. According to Arpincu, the average price per lot in 2007 increased 18 percent and the overall sales volume increased 4 percent. Auction houses boasted the highest sales in art history and claimed the highest global turnover. Some enthusiastic players in the game came to believe that the bubble would go on and on, but indications are that it can’t and it won’t. How will this likely drop in market price affect Appraisers? What are the indications that it can’t and it won’t. How will this likely drop in market price affect Appraisers? What are the implications of these changes? How will stolen works of art increase and consumers protect their works of art? The 2008 National Conference has geared up a stellar assembly of experts to shed light on these and other issues.

Changing Markets

Throughout 2007 and 2008, stories of astonishing sales records tumbled out of the press offices of Christie’s and Sotheby’s. According to Arpincu, the average price per lot in 2007 increased 18 percent and the overall sales volume increased 4 percent. Auction houses boasted the highest sales in art history and claimed the highest global turnover. Some enthusiastic players in the game came to believe that the bubble would go on and on, but indications are that it can’t and it won’t. How will this likely drop in market price affect Appraisers? What are the implications of these changes? How will stolen works of art increase and consumers protect their works of art? The 2008 National Conference has geared up a stellar assembly of experts to shed light on these and other issues.

Changing Markets

Throughout 2007 and 2008, stories of astonishing sales records tumbled out of the press offices of Christie’s and Sotheby’s. According to Arpincu, the average price per lot in 2007 increased 18 percent and the overall sales volume increased 4 percent. Auction houses boasted the highest sales in art history and claimed the highest global turnover. Some enthusiastic players in the game came to believe that the bubble would go on and on, but indications are that it can’t and it won’t. How will this likely drop in market price affect Appraisers? What are the implications of these changes? How will stolen works of art increase and consumers protect their works of art? The 2008 National Conference has geared up a stellar assembly of experts to shed light on these and other issues.

Changing Markets

Throughout 2007 and 2008, stories of astonishing sales records tumbled out of the press offices of Christie’s and Sotheby’s. According to Arpincu, the average price per lot in 2007 increased 18 percent and the overall sales volume increased 4 percent. Auction houses boasted the highest sales in art history and claimed the highest global turnover. Some enthusiastic players in the game came to believe that the bubble would go on and on, but indications are that it can’t and it won’t. How will this likely drop in market price affect Appraisers? What are the implications of these changes? How will stolen works of art increase and consumers protect their works of art? The 2008 National Conference has geared up a stellar assembly of experts to shed light on these and other issues.

Changing Markets

Throughout 2007 and 2008, stories of astonishing sales records tumbled out of the press offices of Christie’s and Sotheby’s. According to Arpincu, the average price per lot in 2007 increased 18 percent and the overall sales volume increased 4 percent. Auction houses boasted the highest sales in art history and claimed the highest global turnover. Some enthusiastic players in the game came to believe that the bubble would go on and on, but indications are that it can’t and it won’t. How will this likely drop in market price affect Appraisers? What are the implications of these changes? How will stolen works of art increase and consumers protect their works of art? The 2008 National Conference has geared up a stellar assembly of experts to shed light on these and other issues.

Changing Markets

Throughout 2007 and 2008, stories of astonishing sales records tumbled out of the press offices of Christie’s and Sotheby’s. According to Arpincu, the average price per lot in 2007 increased 18 percent and the overall sales volume increased 4 percent. Auction houses boasted the highest sales in art history and claimed the highest global turnover. Some enthusiastic players in the game came to believe that the bubble would go on and on, but indications are that it can’t and it won’t. How will this likely drop in market price affect Appraisers? What are the implications of these changes? How will stolen works of art increase and consumers protect their works of art? The 2008 National Conference has geared up a stellar assembly of experts to shed light on these and other issues.

Changing Markets

Throughout 2007 and 2008, stories of astonishing sales records tumbled out of the press offices of Christie’s and Sotheby’s. According to Arpincu, the average price per lot in 2007 increased 18 percent and the overall sales volume increased 4 percent. Auction houses boasted the highest sales in art history and claimed the highest global turnover. Some enthusiastic players in the game came to believe that the bubble would go on and on, but indications are that it can’t and it won’t. How will this likely drop in market price affect Appraisers? What are the implications of these changes? How will stolen works of art increase and consumers protect their works of art? The 2008 National Conference has geared up a stellar assembly of experts to shed light on these and other issues.

Changing Markets

Throughout 2007 and 2008, stories of astonishing sales records tumbled out of the press offices of Christie’s and Sotheby’s. According to Arpincu, the average price per lot in 2007 increased 18 percent and the overall sales volume increased 4 percent. Auction houses boasted the highest sales in art history and claimed the highest global turnover. Some enthusiastic players in the game came to believe that the bubble would go on and on, but indications are that it can’t and it won’t. How will this likely drop in market price affect Appraisers? What are the implications of these changes? How will stolen works of art increase and consumers protect their works of art? The 2008 National Conference has geared up a stellar assembly of experts to shed light on these and other issues.

Changing Markets

Throughout 2007 and 2008, stories of astonishing sales records tumbled out of the press offices of Christie’s and Sotheby’s. According to Arpincu, the average price per lot in 2007 increased 18 percent and the overall sales volume increased 4 percent. Auction houses boasted the highest sales in art history and claimed the highest global turnover. Some enthusiastic players in the game came to believe that the bubble would go on and on, but indications are that it can’t and it won’t. How will this likely drop in market price affect Appraisers? What are the implications of these changes? How will stolen works of art increase and consumers protect their works of art? The 2008 National Conference has geared up a stellar assembly of experts to shed light on these and other issues.
Day Passes

- $50, Saturday November 8, 2:00 pm Session
- $65, Saturday November 8, 3:30 pm Session

Special Sessions & Workshops

Sponsored by Huntington T. Block Insurance.

Museum of Arts and Design

Appraisers Guide to Contract Law

Specialist Session: Marine Paintings

Workshop: USPAP Updates

Registration

- Yes, I will attend the 2008 National Conference and would like to...